Design and Operating Principles

- Partnership among Multilateral Development Banks (AfDB, AsDB, EBRD, IDB, and WBG) to support mitigation and adaptation in a coherent and integrated way
- Programmatic approach
- Demonstrate scale and transformation
- Multi-stakeholder at governance and country levels
- Leverages public and private sector
- Complementarity with other partners at the country level
- Sunset clause
Three emerging lessons from the PPCR on preparing countries for large-scale climate finance

Importance of country-driveness in programming PPCR resources.

Deploy a programmatic approach to develop a pipeline of projects and programs.

Encourage a partnership-based approach to resources programming at the country-level versus a competitive approach.
Developing a programmatic approach

Establishing country ownership from the outset facilitates the preparation process, increases commitment to the program, and ensures that the SPCR reflects country priorities.

Capacity building is central to the success of the PPCR, and a clear justification for a strong preparatory phase prior to the implementation of the investment plan.

Institutional and inter-governmental coordination is essential for developing and maintaining a programmatic approach that will support mainstreaming climate resilience.

Consultations undertaken during Phase 1 enhanced engagement and communication among stakeholders and increased ownership across all pilot countries.

The private sector has a critical role to play in climate change adaptation, but several major obstacles to private sector investment have limited engagement to date.

A regional track can provide benefits to countries with limited capacity facing shared challenges, like the Caribbean and Pacific island states.
